Last week, Ontario's government said that people who want to become teachers will have to go to teacher's college for two years instead of one. That's after regular college or university.

enroll to become teachers. And there are two reasons for the changes.

teachers could not get a job. By cutting back the number of people who can study to become teachers — and adding to the time they study — fewer people will likely become teachers.

brings Ontario's teachers' training up to the level of some of the other provinces which have longer times of study.

The changes, which will start in 2015, will also affect government funding for teachers' programs. Right now teachers' programs receive more money from the government than some other programs, like social work and law. So the government says it will reduce funding for teachers' programs to match others.

This is only the third time since the 1800s that a major change in teacher training has taken place. For most of the 20th century, teachers required a high school diploma and one year of teacher training.
