Many experts think there is a reason why children in the same family are different. They believe that the difference comes from the birth order— (23) the children are the oldest, the middle, or the youngest child in their family. For example, the oldest children are usually very careful and like to write lists. They also do (24) their parents tell them and don't give their parents many problems. What are middle children like? Well, middle children don't like rules; they like to do what they (25). But they like being with people, and they have lots of friends. (26) the youngest? Youngest children are often shy and they have a few good friends. They have lots of different interests, too. And finally, what about only children? Only children don't have any brothers or sisters. They are a (27) of the oldest and the youngest. They are quiet, but they can get angry very quickly. They are also very artistic—they're often good at art and music. Well, that's what the experts say. Do you agree?
